Security Exercise Support

Once a security team is trained and all security systems are effectively integrated, it is prudent to test and assess the overall security capability through the use of exercises. Exercises are scripted, tightly controlled events that illuminate weak points. They also highlight challenges in integration between various security systems and communications shortfalls. These events can be limited in scope to one system or include any or all of the integrated security elements. Exercises can be scheduled routinely, executed as no-notice drills, or test a facility against a specific corporate or U.S. Government standard.

- Security readiness exercises (comprehensive or by security system)
- Scenario based exercises (validation testing or threat driven)
- Incident management exercises (physical reality based or table top)
